Safety Rules:

What you must have on a truck

A horn, good tyres with a clear tread pattern, a good exhaust that isn't noisy, safe steering wheel, mudguards, good brakes at the front and back, a red reflector.

Tips on driving safely

Drive smoothly, avoiding fast acceleration and shark braking, avoid over-revving by changing gear, don't leave your truck idling for a long period, avoid carrying unnecessary loads.

Safety tips for night driving

Make sure your windscreen and lights are clean, never wear dark glasses, stop and rest if you are sleepy, don't blind other drivers with your trucks headlights - dip them when vehicles are coming towards you or when following other vehicles.

If you are blinded by the lights of oncoming vehicles: slow down or stop.

Drivers of trucks often have large blind spots behind and at the side of their truck, so it is a good idea to position your vehicle far enough back so it can be seen in their side mirrors. This will let the truck driver know you are there.

Important:

You must carry your drivers licence with you at all times when driving. Drivers are required by law to produce their drivers licence to an enforcement officer on request.

Indicate for at least three seconds before slowing down to park. Move as far off the road as possible when stopping or parking on a road with fast moving traffic.

Newspapers in Education 2010

APN's Newspapers in Education (NiE) programme is a free, multi-media education programme dedicated to helping educate and develop informed, socially-aware youth across New Zealand. NiE promotes student literacy and analysis of the news and media, while encouraging effective use of newspapers in the classroom.

The programme offers NiE pages published both in print and as e-Editions, during school term times in eight APN newspapers, online teacher resources contained within their website, printed teacher resource manuals, topical ten-day studies and resources, and the annual Design the Front Page of the Newspaper Competition.

Purpose-written by former-teachers, NiE pages are published on a Tuesday each week during term times in eight APN daily newspapers offering both a dynamic classroom resource for teachers, and a useful home-schooling tool for parents.

Pages contain up-to-the minute information on current affairs and a wide range of learning areas. They help develop a variety of skills and thinking competencies and link to The New Zealand Curriculum objectives.

The Northern Advocate

The Northern Advocate delivers on average 50,700 newspapers from Wellsford north to 68 schools.

Mr Mac has been a major sponsor of NIE for 8 years, 5 of which he has been a platinum sponsor!
